Abstract

Martin J Desht, a former steelworker, photographed scenes of deindustrialization throughout the state of Pennsylvania beginning in the early 1980s. By 1992, his exhibit Faces from an American Dream was traveling to different institutions on the East coast. After the exhibit, Desht continued to focus on this theme and chose to photograph mainly Philadelphia during the 1990s.

This collection is comprised of a set of images from Faces from an American Dream and other of images that depict deindustrialization in Philadelphia during the 1990s. Each group of images is accompanied by an inventory that includes picture captions, negative numbers, and negative dates. There is also a short introduction for each image from his exhibit. The images were printed from original negatives for which Desht maintains the copyrights.

Background note

Martin J. Desht is a photographer from Easton, Pennsylvania, who has documented Pennsylvania focusing mainly on the state's deindustrialization. His interest grew from his early experiences growing up in Allentown, Pennsylvania, working for the Navy, and becoming a crane electrician for Bethlehem Steel (1973-1978). By the end of the decade, he was unemployed, but he soon graduated with a degree in English from DeSales University. Inspired by his recent unemployment, he picked up a camera. Desht began photographing evidence of deindustrialization across the state, and eventually collaborated with Richard Sharpless of Lafayette College in 1989. With Sharpless and funds from the Pennsylvania Humanities Council, Desht developed his first exhibit, Faces from an American Dream. This exhibit opened in 1992 and traveled to many different locations over the next several years. In the 1990s, he continued to focus on scenes from post-industrial America and turned this time to Philadelphia. Hoping to capture the fate of what was once called the "Workshop of the World," he photographed neighborhood scenes in Philadelphia, both from his car and on foot.

Scope & content

The photographs of Martin J. Desht portray various neighborhoods throughout Philadelphia between 1990 and 1998 and emphasize the deindustrialization of the city in the late twentieth century and its move toward the service industry. The photographs have been inventoried in six separate groups according to submission. The ones that span from 1990 to 1995 were made for a traveling exhibit titled Faces from an American Dream. Desht conceived and developed the exhibit between 1989 and 2003; a booklet with descriptions accompanies this set of images. In 2003, Desht created a second booklet describing the scenes he photographed between 1996 and 1997, which represent the second group of photographs. Then between 2005 and 2008, Desht made four annual submissions of images representing the third, fourth, fifth, and sixth groups and dating between 1997 and 1998.

The photographs from Faces from an American Dream depict mainly street scenes at Ridge Avenue, Cresson Street, Terrace Street, and North Broad Street; the Jack Frost sugar plant; and Dodge Steel Castings. Before the prints, there is a folder that contains a booklet Desht prepared for the Historical Society of Pennsylvania consisting of an introduction and notes related to the exhibit and an inventory of the images with descriptions. The inventory notes the original negative number and negative date for each image.

The group photographs taken between 1996 and 1997 (one photograph from 1998) also have a folder containing an inventory, but the descriptions are much less detailed than those from the Faces from an American Dream inventory. Usually, the inventory notes only the subject of the photograph. The images in this group include Bob's Diner in Manayunk and street scenes of North Broad Street and 1400-2300 Ridge Avenue. Some of the businesses depicted are the following: Tell a Friend Discount Grocery, Knox's Barber Shop, Mr. Chip's Bar, Midway Pizza, and The Diving Bell.

Inventories of the 2005, 2006, 2007, and 2008 "annual submissions" have been included in folders. In the image descriptions, Desht describes the setting in which the photograph was taken and also the people with whom he spoke while the pictures were taken. There are scenes and businesses from several Philadelphia neighborhoods including Kensington, Port Richmond, North Philadelphia, Manayunk, and West Philadelphia.
