

The Orderly Book of Captain William Trent at Fort Pitt

Transcribed by Kimberly Burton

We have tried to make this transcription as literal as possible, without producing a facsimile of the pages. Spelling and punctuation are as in the original Words stricken out are shown with a line through them here. Interlineations are indicated with up and down arrows. Abbreviations are maintained but superscripts are brought down to the baseline. Words that can be inferred but not really read because they are in the margin or partially torn or obscured are placed in square brackets. Words that are unclear are indicated with a question mark in square brackets or with the word "illeg." in italics and in square brackets. Editor's additions are in italics and square brackets.

Head Quarters New York the 4th. May 1763 Orders

His Excellency the Commander in Chief makes known to the Army that the definitive Treaty of Peace, between his Majesty and the most Christien and Catholick Kings, [is?] signed; to which orders observance will be had. Signed Jeffery Amherst [Gen?] O. When ever a Covering Party is ordered out, whoever may Command the Party, is not upon any Account to allow any Man to pass his Centinels without a written Order from the Commanding Officer of the garrison & none of the Men to run upon any occasion before their Officer but keep themselves cool and wait for Orders and directions, then they may allways assure themselves of success, but by runing without directions, they will fall in disorder, and be out of breath when they come up to engage the Enemy which would be of the greatest disadvantage to them and bad Consequence. An Officer of each Company to see the Mens Arms drawn immediately and the spare Balls to be delivered, by the Serj to the Quarter Master, none of the Arms to be fired of except the Rifles. The Commanding Officer is pleased to appoint John Robertson of the Granideer Company, Serjeant of Militia in his own Company in the Room of Sert [Miller?] [Dead?], and he is to be obeyed as such.
