Abstract

Mary Coates (1707-1773) and her husband John Reynell (1708-1784) presided over a successful dynasty of Quaker professionals and philanthropists, despite having no biological children who lived to adulthood. After the death of Mary's brother Samuel in 1748, John Reynell took on responsibility for her three orphaned nephews, Thomas, Josiah, and Samuel Jr. Little Samuel (1711-1748) eventually succeeded his "Uncle Reynell" as the head of a prosperous international trade business, dealing in American lumber, Caribbean sugar, and European manufactured goods. A contemporary of Benjamin Franklin, Samuel was among the first shareholders of the Library Company of Philadelphia. His son, Benjamin H. Coates, was a poet and a physician, a founder of the North American Medical and Surgical Journal and an attending physician at several charitable institutions in Philadelphia. Josiah established his own shipping business with his friend Edward Randolph, and fathered a vigorous family. His son George Morrison Coates also became a merchant, specializing in hardware. George's two unmarried daughters, Beulah and Mary, distinguished themselves as pillars of women's charitable organizations in the mid-nineteenth century.

The Coates and Reynell Family papers document the professional and personal lives of elite Quakers in Philadelphia in the eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries through correspondence, scrapbooks, receipt books, ledgers, accounts, wills, deeds, and medical manuscripts. The collection is particularly strong in records of international and domestic trade, medical and scientific knowledge, and women's philanthropic activities. Letters and financial and legal documents recording the professional and personal activities of merchants John Reynell (1708-1784) and Samuel Coates (1748-1830) make up the bulk of the papers. The next most significant portion of the collection consists of scientific or medical essays, correspondence, and notes pertaining to Dr. Benjamin H. Coates. The papers of Mary and Beulah Coates consist of minutes for the meetings of their charitable societies and notes documenting Mary's genealogical research on the family. The collection also includes correspondence and financial records pertaining to the Zane, Shewbart, and Morris families, whose estates were settled by members of the Coates clan.

Background note

Thomas Coates (d. 1719) of Leicestershire, England settled in Philadelphia in the late seventeenth century. In 1694 he married Beulah Jacques, also originally of Leicestershire, but a descendant of French Huguenots who had fled to England to escape persecution. The couple set up house near Second and Market (then called High) Street in Philadelphia, while also maintaining property in Frankford.

Thomas and Beulah's daughter Mary (1707-1773) married John Reynell (1708-1784), a Quaker from Devonshire, England, who had arrived in Philadelphia around 1729. Reynell was a merchant dealing primarily in manufactured goods from England, sugar and liquor from the West Indies, and raw materials from America. Reynell's health and professional success were unusual in his family: back in England, financial hardship plagued his parents and siblings. His sister Sarah Reynell served time in debtor's prison in the early 1730s, and by 1737 illness exacerbated by poverty had claimed her as well as both parents and brother Samuel. John tried to convince his one surviving relative, sister Mary, to join him in Philadelphia, but she preferred to remain with friends in Devonshire. John and Mary had several children of their own, but only one survived even into adolescence. Therefore, John was especially attentive to his Coates connections, and effectively adopted his Coates nephews after the death of Mary's younger brother Samuel (1711-1748).

Samuel Coates (1711-1748) was a contemporary of Benjamin Franklin, and one of the original shareholders in the Library Company of Philadelphia. In 1734 he married Mary Langdale, the daughter of well-known English Quaker preachers Josiah and Margaret Langdale. Samuel had inherited the property in Frankford from his father, and with his fruitful marriage he seemed poised for success. Sadly, however, he died at the age of thirty-seven, leaving at least four young children: Thomas, Josiah Langdale, Samuel Jr., and Alice. Mary Langdale Coates died not long after, leaving the children to the guardianship of John and Mary Reynell.

Samuel Coates, Jr. (1748-1830) was only nine weeks old at the death of his father and was entirely raised by the Reynells, ultimately succeeding his uncle John at the head of his business. Samuel Jr.'s trade reflected the increasing independence of the American colonies, and ultimately of the young United States: while John Reynell had dealt extensively with Europe and the West Indies, the majority of Samuel's business involved shipments up and down the east coast from Philadelphia to Savannah or Newburyport. His relationships with his colleagues were often personal as well as professional; he was frequently called upon as an executor of estates. He also was an active participant in the intellectual life of Philadelphia, and served as treasurer of the Library Company of Philadelphia from about 1790 until 1820.

Samuel Jr. married twice: first to Lydia Saunders, and later to Amy Hornor. In all Samuel had seven children who survived to adulthood, no small achievement in an age of frequent epidemics. During the yellow fever outbreaks of the 1790s, Amy would often take the children to the country during the dangerous late summer months, while Samuel remained in Philadelphia to attend to his business. In addition to caring for his own children, Samuel was guardian to the four children of his friend Captain William Vicary, who died in 1784.

The most prominent of Samuel Jr.'s children was Dr. Benjamin Hornor Coates (1797-1881). Benjamin was born at a moment that allowed him to take full advantage of the burgeoning educational opportunities in Philadelphia during the early nineteenth century, and he pursued a career as both a man of science and a man of letters. He received his medical training at the Pennsylvania Hospital, and upon his certification in 1818 went on to develop a successful private practice that partially supported his work as an attending physician for charitable institutions such as the Children's Asylum. Benjamin became a prominent member of the Academy of Natural Sciences as well as the College of Physicians, and a founding editor of the North American Medical and Surgical Journal. He wrote prolifically, not only producing essays on scientific and medical subjects but also poetry and prose relating to current events such as Napoleon's European campaigns.

Josiah Langdale Coates (1747-1809), son of Samuel Coates, Sr. (1711-1748) had a career much like his brother Samuel Jr.'s, though he chose to establish an independent shipping business with his friend Edward Randolph. Josiah and his wife Mary Morrison had three children: two daughters and one son, George Morrison Coates (1779-1868). Upon completing his education, George learned the hardware business in Benjamin Hornor's store. He married his employer's youngest daughter Rebecca Hornor (1781-1853) in 1807, and fathered six children.

George's two oldest daughters, Beulah and Mary, never married, but occupied themselves with the care of their numerous relatives and of the city's poor and needy. Beulah particularly was a pillar of women's philanthropic organizations, serving as an officer in the Union Benevolent Association and a seasonal Sewing Society. Mary was deeply interested in family history, and in the 1880s she privately published a collection of the anecdotes she had gathered not only about the Coates relatives, but also the Langdales and Hornors. Mary died in 1913.

Scope & content

The Coates and Reynell family papers consist of business records, legal documents, correspondence, scrapbooks, essays, and diaries that portray the professional, religious, and social lives of prosperous Philadelphians in the eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries. The collection is particularly rich in records of domestic and international trade in North America before and after the Revolutionary War, education and medical science in the early nineteenth century, women's charitable activities in the mid-nineteenth century, Quakerism, and family history.

The correspondence and business records of John Reynell and his nephew Samuel Coates (Series I and II) document how international trade was conducted in the eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries. Through a network of friends, family, and agents, John Reynell bought manufactured goods in Britain to sell in America and the West Indies, bought Caribbean rum and sugar for sale in America, and sold American lumber, flour, and meat overseas. While Samuel Coates maintained some of his uncle's international connections, his business records show how the burgeoning economy of the new American nation led to a rapid increase in domestic trade during the late eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries. Goods that John Reynell had to order from England Samuel Coates could obtain from Massachusetts. Their correspondence also documented contemporary business practices like the apprentice system.

The papers of Benjamin Hornor Coates (Series III) offer insight into the intellectual world of Philadelphia in the early nineteenth century, with particular attention to medical science. Benjamin H. Coates was among the first generation of physicians to pursue medical education in a hospital setting as opposed to through apprenticeship with an experienced doctor. His correspondence and medical papers document a crucial moment in American medical history, when the drastic bleeding and purging that had been traditional for generations at last began to give way to observation and experimentation according to the scientific method. As a founding editor of the New England Medical and Surgical Journal, Benjamin H. Coates read and commented on a vast number of medical essays which comprised some of the most advanced medical thought of his day.

Beulah and Mary Coates, the grand-nieces of Samuel Coates, were archetypal benevolent women of the mid-nineteenth century. Neither married, and both were motivated by their Quaker faith to use their energy and their privilege for the benefit of the less fortunate. Their papers consist primarily of minute books recording the activities of several women's charitable associations which supplied food, clothing, and other assistance to those in need.

The personal correspondence of the Coates and Reynell families, and their friends the Zane and Morris families (Series VI and VII) discuss family news and religious matters. Subjects that receive particular attention include the imprisonment of John Reynell's sister Sarah for debt, Quaker preacher Jane Hoskins' speaking tour in England, the 1793 yellow fever epidemic in Philadelphia, childrearing and education in the early nineteenth century, and the genealogy of the Coates family.

Series description

Series 1. John Reynell, 1719-1789 (Boxes 1-15)

a. Incoming Correspondence, 1729-1773.

This subseries contains letters and enclosures received by Philadelphia merchant John Reynell (1708-1784). Some personal correspondence from Reynell's parents, siblings, and friends in England and elsewhere are included, but the bulk of the material relates to his business. Many letters, however, include both personal and professional information. Reynell dealt primarily in manufactured goods from England, sugar and liquor from the West Indies, and raw materials from America. His primary business correspondents were Henry Bonnin of Antigua, Daniel Flexney of London, Elias Bland of London, and his cousin Dr. M. Lee Dicker of Exon, Devon, England. He also received letters from his father Samuel Reynell (d. 1735), his brother Samuel Reynell, Jr. (d. 1735), his sister, Mary Reynell (later Mary Groth), and his friend Jane Hoskins. The documents are arranged chronologically.

John Reynell emigrated to America from Exon, Devon, England sometime before 1730, and quickly established himself as a merchant in Philadelphia. He dealt in a wide variety of goods, importing manufactured items from England or sugar and rum from the West Indies for sale in Philadelphia, and shipping raw materials and staples to be sold in the West Indies or Europe. The success of any particular shipment depended heavily on the actions of his overseas agents and the market at the time. Henry Bonnin of Antigua warned him in 1731: "Our best Merkit for flo[u]r is Commonly in Oct & Nov... I cannot recommend anything better than flor unless a little Tobacco if Clear of Duty. Your Bacon would have done Tolerable." Reynell's financial relations with other parties were often complex; while he bought and sold on his own behalf, he also did so as an agent for his cousin, Dr. M. Lee Dicker, as indicated by a letter from the firm Gale, Atkins, & Woodcock of Kingston, Jamaica: "We have orders from Dr. M. Lee Dicker to give you advice to send us for his account any of Philadelphia produce that we shall judge will meet with a market here for advantage." (August 21, 1731.) His correspondence also included information about other aspects of contemporary business practices, as when Jane Hoskins recommended the son of an acquaintance as an apprentice for Reynell. "The boy is 15 years old writes well is a good accountant... of good family & not brought up as a Gentleman... he is a brave boy & will do well I doubt not," she wrote in 1750.

Reynell's professional correspondence addressed current events as well as business practices. In February 1736/7, his colleague Michael Lovell of Antigua wrote, "You have already no Doubt terrible Relations of the Negro Affair we are now pretty Easy as to any Danger from them but the Fatigue is not yet over this Day & [h]o[u]r 9 are to be Executed w[h]ich will in all make about 70 & they the most valuable of our Slaves so that we deem the country no 12 thousand Pounds & upwards in Debt. Our Courts are suspended & Military Law hath been in Force near 3 months... so that all manner of Business is at a Stand." In January 1744/5, his cousin observed, "the French War has advanc'd Insurance to such Premiums as hardly any Branch of Trade can bear, without making very extraordinary prices at the Market."

A Quaker, Reynell maintained contact with his co-religionists in England as well as building relationships with American Friends. His friend Jane Hoskins was a Quaker leader who corresponded with him frequently while she was in England on a preaching tour in 1749. She wrote, “altho ye Life of Religion is Much wanting [in England] yet ye Extending of God’s Love through Christ is wonderful unto ye People not only of our Society but Generally unto all so yet There is Roome Enough to preach ye Gospell & have Reason to hope some is Made to Receive ye word with gladness.” (June 29 1749.) He also corresponded with a Mary Keene of London, who wrote about those who persecuted Quakers, “sometimes [I] have had a secret hope the Lord would pleas to disapint thare wicked purposes & help his people & nothing so like to suckseed as for all them ho has been marcyfully acquainted with the dealings of the Lord, hum[b]ley to implore his aid & assistance.” (Aug 5 1755)

Letters from Reynell’s family back in England reveal the dwindling of the family and presage the end of the Samuel Reynell branch of the Reynell family. Samuel and Sarah Reynell of Exon, Devon, England, had four children: Samuel Jr., John, Sarah, and Mary. (The birth order of the children is uncertain.) The family fortunes foundered in the early 1730s, when young Sarah was imprisoned for non-payment of debts. While in prison, she formed an attachment to a Scottish fellow prisoner. When, after more than a year, her father succeeded in buying her freedom, and the Scotsman also secured his release, the two of them went to Ireland together, meaning to embark from there for Philadelphia. However, they were unable to raise the cost of the passage, and returned to England after a few months, claiming to have been married while in Ireland. She settled “near Barnstable and was there some time in a poor Miserable Condition till she was delivered of a Maiden Child and their poverty Came more on them to that degree that they had but little meat to eat or Clothes to wear and in that Condition Came home”¹ to her father’s house. The presence of Sarah, her baby, and her unreliable Scotsman put great strain on her parents, particularly her mother, who suffered increasingly from general ill-health and a “mortification in her leg” and died only a few months after Sarah’s arrival. Sarah’s baby soon died as well. The Scotsman continued to talk of taking Sarah with him to America, where he claimed to have property. John’s father wrote “I am [owed] by thy Sister on all acctts 20-30 [pounds] for which Reason I caution thee to beware of them if thou shouldst see them in [thy] part of the world.”²

The warning proved unnecessary. Sarah died in 1735 without leaving England. In the same year, Samuel Jr. died of tuberculosis and Samuel Sr. also passed away after a brief illness, leaving Mary without any immediate family in the country. Her father had described her as “a Stout Strong Girl... servicable to us in our weakness... able to weave well and I hope as she comes on more in years she will Come into more Stability of mind.”³ John invited Mary to Philadelphia, to live with him, but she was afraid to make the transatlantic passage alone, and chose to remain in England with the aid of their cousin, Dr. M. Lee Dicker. She married a Mr. Groth sometime before 1750, and had one son, John Reynell Groth. By 1773, however, both husband and son had died.

John Reynell was the last chance for continuing his family name. He married Mary Coates in the early 1730s, but their longest-lived child, a daughter, died in her teens. After the deaths of Mary's brother Samuel Coates (1711-1748) and his wife Mary (Langdale) Coates, they adopted his sons Josiah L. Coates (1747-1809) and Samuel Coates (1748-1830). The Coates boys are not, however, referenced in this series.

b. Outgoing Correspondence, 1729-1747, 1752-1784.

This subseries contains John Reynell's letterbooks, in which he preserved copies of his outgoing correspondence. The bulk of the letters address his financial and business concerns, but some personal correspondence is included, dealing with family news and current events.

Reynell's outgoing correspondence covers much of the same ground as his incoming correspondence, discussing shipments of sugar, flour, cloth, wood, tobacco, and similar goods. He sometimes indicated family correspondence merely by noting "Wrote to Brother 13 October 1730," but often copied out his letters in full. In his personal correspondence, Reynell noted not only family news, but also religious matters and current events. In 1753 he wrote to his sister Mary, "I hope by your Husband's leave thou will Endeavour to make a good Friend of [your son] which would yeild me great Satisfaction if I should Live to see him a good one, in Life & Power, for as to his being one in form only, it would not avail, but [only?] when the Power of God comes to Operate & Work in the mind, & Cleanse it from Sin." To colleague Elias Bland, he observed in 1756, "There is now a Prospect of Peace with the Indians, the Governor Sate out to day for the Moravian Settlement at Bethlehem in Order to hold a Treaty with about 30 of them which are come in for that purpose, and a Number of Friends are going up this Afternoon, to be present & take some kind Notice of them, & Yesterday a Subscription was set on foot among Friends, for a Fund to make Presents out of to the Indians."

He made few comments about the turmoil of revolution, though on May 5, 1775 he told his sister, "We are at present in a very Melancholy Situation; the disputes between England & America are risen so high Concerning taxation that most all No[rth] America are in great Commotions, and are preparing to defend their rights & privileges & the horrors of a civil war seems near us. One engagement has already happen'd, between the English soldiers & the New England men wherein the latter gain'd the advantages & drove the Soldiers back to Boston where it will End the Lord only knows, who I humbly beseech to preserve us, in this time of great Difficulty & Distress."

c. Business Papers, 1719-1769.

John Reynell's business papers include ledgers, daybooks, cash books, invoice books, indentures, bills of lading, and other documents recording his buying and selling in England, America, and the West Indies. See series 2b for related business papers.

Two folders of papers related to the settlement of John Reynell's estate are also included in this subseries.

d. Additional Papers, 1730-1791.

This subseries contains items separated from the preceding subseries for reasons of provenance. The incoming correspondence contains a mixture of personal and professional information, just as in subseries a, but nearly all the other items are business-related. Included are a cash book, an invoice book, financial journals (1764-1778), and a receipt book from the settlement of John Reynell's estate. The journals (Volume 29 and Volume 30) are bound photocopies of originals "from the library of David Hunt Stockwell" according to bookplates.

These papers are arranged by provenance and then chronologically within those divisions.

Series 2. Samuel Coates, 1765-1838 (Boxes 17-46)

a. Correspondence, 1770-1836, n.d.

This subseries contains correspondence received by Samuel Coates (1748-1830) from business associates, friends, and family members, as well as four letterbooks with copies of his outgoing letters. Coates and his correspondents discussed the conduct of domestic and international trade, religious matters, family news, and current events.

As a merchant in Philadelphia, Samuel Coates dealt in a wide variety of goods, including cloth, wood, flour, pork, iron, tea, nuts, saltpeter and sole leather. Unlike his guardian and erstwhile partner John Reynell, Coates traded primarily with domestic merchants, though he occasionally had an interest in trade expeditions that went as far as China. The bulk of his contacts were in Newburyport, Massachusetts. Other cities well-represented in Coates' correspondence include Bensalem and Haverhill, Pennsylvania; New York City; Savannah, Georgia; and Bristol, England. In the early 1800s, Savannah surpassed Newburyport as the site of most of Coates' business.

Much of Coates' business correspondence consisted of requests for merchandise and notices that particular objects had been received. Stephen Reynolds wrote on October 25, 1790, "Esteemed Friend send me as soon as possible two Dozen Boys hatts... and two barrels of the highest proof West India Rum I want it Very Strong to raise the proof of some I have." Reports from his agents buying and selling in other cities were also common. His agent Alexander McGregor reported from New York City on February 28, 1790, "About 5 O'Clock in the afternoon I got the Tea landed... but have not yet sold any... I intend to begin the sales tomorrow at 2/6 and expect to sell all off in two or three days." Some discussions of the effect of weather on shipping, the health of the market for various goods, and the hiring of apprentices, also appear.

The single best-represented correspondent among Coates' friends and family is William Hartshorne of Alexandria, Virginia, his brother-in-law by his first marriage to Lydia Saunders (d. 1789.) Coates and Hartshorne shared the same Quaker faith and had many friends in common to cement their connection. When Coates prepared to marry for the second time, Hartshorne wrote, "I take notice of thy intentions and in this as in every thing else I wish thee as much happiness as this world can afford – it is a chequered scene at best and certainly nothing more than the road to a better Country where I hope we shall all meet at last. [W]hile we remain here it will really give me satisfaction if I can administer to thy comfort being willing at all times to render thee or thine any services in my power, having often experience thy kind attention & regard to myself and family. Please give my Love to thy Friend and tell her I expect to have the Pleasure of seeing her sometime at Philadelphia."

When Samuel Coates' friend Captain John Vicary died, Coates became the guardian of his four children. (See series VIII). Coates corresponded regularly with the only son, William Vicary, who followed in his father's footsteps as a seaman despite his complaints that he was overworked, underpaid, and frequently beaten. William wrote in 1791, "My conduct has been I suppose so strange to you but I am sure when you know the whole you will be satisfied with it... I suppose you have heard from Mr. Gilmore that I have left the ship... [I know] you wished me to stay by the Ship & keep in the employ and I am sensible you know what was best for me and I had given you so much trouble that I was very sorry to be obliged to vex you again. The Captain had used me so ill that I could not bear it any longer."

Coates' connection to the Vicary family is also referenced in other correspondence: Rachel Saunders, his sister-in-law through his first marriage, wrote in 1793, "Hope Hannah Vicary will be of use to you has she done with School I know she can sew very well but do not recollect much about her writing."

Yellow fever epidemics, not only the great one of 1793 but subsequent outbreaks, were a common topic in Coates' personal correspondence. Often his wife, the former Amy Hornor, would take the children out of the city during the summer and fall months to avoid the threat of illness, while Coates remained to attend to business. There are a number of letters from Amy during these separations, and a few from the children. Samuel H. Coates complained in 1805, "I wish to come home as it is as sickly about the country as in town for there has been one case of the fever in haddonfield since I have been here; and Doctor Henry has one new case at the landing. J. Redman has been poorly for two or three days and was taken last night with a violent fit of the cramp in his stomach and Sally thought him like to die but has got better this morning." (Oct 12, 1805)

This subseries is divided into incoming and outgoing correspondence, and arranged chronologically within each category. See also series 2f.

b. Business papers, 1772-1838, n.d

Samuel Coates and his brother Josiah joined their guardian John Reynell in his merchant and shipping business in the early 1770s, and continued the business after his death. Samuel Coates' business papers include invoices, receipts, bills of lading, daybooks, ledgers, and account books. Some loose receipts and accounts addressed to John Reynell are interfiled with Coates' papers from the 1770s. Though Josiah Coates left the business in 1791, hoping to find more lucrative employment, Samuel traded successfully for many years. The materials in this subseries reflect his transactions with other merchants both in America and overseas. Letterbooks, ledgers, cash books, daybooks, journals, and bank books from every phase of the business are also included. See also series 2f.

c. Estate papers, 1765-1833

This subseries contains records of estates for which Samuel Coates served as executor, including correspondence and financial statements. The decedents include James Bringhurst, Samuel Cooper, Andrew Doz, Benjamin Flower, Richard Rundle, and Thomas Ruston, among others. The papers are arranged alphabetically.

d. Loganian Library/Library Company of Philadelphia, 1766-1811.

This subseries contains receipts, financial statements, extracts from the trustees minutes, and a few items of correspondence relating to the operations of the Library Company of Philadelphia and the Loganian Library.

The Library Company of Philadelphia, founded by Benjamin Franklin in 1731, was the first American subscription library. The Loganian Library was established in 1754, in accordance with the will of James Logan, secretary to William Penn and prominent intellectual. The two libraries had complementary collections; the Library Company emphasized works of politics, theology, and literature written in English, while Logan's library included texts in Latin, Greek, and European languages addressing topics in science, medicine, mathematics and science. The very erudition that made the Loganian Library unique made it less popular than the Library Company, and in 1792 the sole remaining trustee arranged for the transfer of Logan's books to the custody of the Library Company.

Samuel Coates was a member of the Library Company of Philadelphia, and served as treasurer for the organization from about 1790 to 1820.

e. Loose papers, 1774-1815, n.d.

This subseries contains loose papers not clearly connected to Samuel Coates except by provenance and chronology. The bulk of the materials are legal papers involving court cases, but also included is an unsigned account of a visit to the Quaker meeting at Roaring Creek (Pennsylvania).

f. Additional materials, 1786-1801.

This subseries contains Samuel Coates materials from accession 140c. Financial notes and shipping invoices similar to the materials in subseries b make up the bulk of this subseries. Also included is one folder of correspondence dated 1797 similar to subseries a, and an account book recording the financial transactions of the Committee of the Three Monthly Meetings of Friends in Philadelphia.

Series 3. Dr. Benjamin Hornor Coates, 1789-1862 (Boxes 47-49)

a. Correspondence, 1806-1843, n.d.

Benjamin H. Coates was born in Philadelphia in 1797, the middle son of Samuel Coates and his second wife Amy Hornor. He attended Enoch Lewis' New Garden school in London Grove, Chester County, then pursued medical training at the Pennsylvania Hospital. Benjamin became a successful physician, connected with the Academy of Natural Sciences and the College of Physicians, and among the founding editors of the North American Medical and Surgical Journal. He also served as an attending physician at several charitable institutions, including the Children's Asylum. A man of letters as well as of science, Benjamin was also a prolific poet and essayist.

This subseries consists primarily of incoming correspondence, though a few copies of outgoing letters are included. Up until 1818, almost all the letters consist of family news and advice from his parents. His father, Samuel Coates, wrote to him on May 10, 1811 with a report of his brother Reynell's fall down the stairs, which resulted in a concussion-like injury. "This Affliction," Samuel wrote, "has arisen from his Uncommon Activity, & propensity to indulge in play. It may become a good Lesson to you both & teach you Caution not to engage in hazardous Enterprises, even in play or otherways."

After Benjamin's medical certification in 1818, his correspondence becomes almost entirely business-oriented, with discussions about particular cases and courses of treatment. Requests for his professional services are common, as in a note from "Uncle E. Yarnall" dated June 1, 1818. "Thy cousin Ellis was taken last evening with spitting of Blood... he has had several spells during the day. If thou could spend the night with us it would be a great satisfaction both to Ellis and to us all." Many letters describe treatments for particular ailments. It is noteworthy that Benjamin discussed treatments not only with other physicians but with other medical practitioners, as shown by his correspondence with a woman named Ann Booth, who could not have been a university-educated doctor. Yet he still preserved the instructions for treating "White swelling" that she sent him in January 1819. "I enjoin a strict attention to a diet of vegetables and milk – to drink freely of a tea made of Elder flower and if convenient, some of the black Alder mixed with them – and to take in the morning, three or four times a week, a wine glass full of salts, prepared with a pint of water to an oz. To prepare the poultice, you must mix indian meal and water as for thick gruel; after it has boiled a time add the Elderflowers to the consistence of a poultice; these will soon soften. While warm stir in a little lard. Apply Morning and Evening."

b. Medical papers, 1806-1847, n.d.

This subseries consists primarily of papers and partial papers submitted to the North American Medical and Surgical Journal or presented at meetings of the College of Physicians. Most of the papers are accounts of medical cases, either illnesses and injuries of individuals, or of groups, as in Dr. Wood's "account of an epidemic at the Pennsylvania Institution for the Deaf and Dumb."

Also included in this subseries are Benjamin H. Coates' practice books, in which he recorded patients visited, treatments given, and charges accumulated, and a blank book for recording donations made to the Pennsylvania Hospital.

c. Estate settlements, 1819-1862.

This subseries contains records of the estates of Samuel Coates (1748-1830), Amy (Hornor) Coates and Andrew Hamilton, for which Benjamin H. Coates served as executor. Andrew Hamilton (not the Secretary of the Treasury) was apparently a friend of the Coates family. This subseries includes some correspondence between Henry Allen Johnson and George Cadwalader.

d. Additional papers, 1789-1845, n.d.

This subseries contains additional papers of Benjamin H. Coates that do not fit into the other sections. Included are assorted loose papers, a cash book, and a draft of the constitution and bylaws of the Historical Society of Pennsylvania. One of the most interesting pieces is a diary or commonplace book that the young Benjamin kept as a record of his education. In the opening entry, dated 1809, he explained his inspiration for the endeavor: "Doctor Rush gave us a very entertaining and I hope useful lecture.... [H]e proposed making children write accounts of whatever they have seen or heard that was new to them, and by observing what they took notice of, to determine what business will suit them for life.' He proceeded over the next few years to sporadically note various facts that he learned and events that he observed, from the deaths of family members to factoids about fence construction.

Series 4. Mary and Beulah Coates, 1711-1915

a. Philanthropic activities, 1832-1915.

Mary and Beulah Coates, the oldest daughters of George Morrison Coates (1779-1868) and granddaughters of Josiah Langdale Coates, never married and devoted a large part of their lives to helping the less fortunate. They organized with other women into societies to provide clothing, housing, and other necessities to those in need. Organizations that benefited from the Coates sisters' efforts included the Sewing Society, the Female Society for the Relief and Employment of the Poor, the Union Benevolent Association, and the Temporary Home Association.

The Sewing Society operated seasonally, meeting during the winters to make clothes, and to plan the distribution of completed garments or purchase of material for making more. New members were admitted by consensus among the existing members, and all paid dues to fund the purchase of materials. Members elected officers to serve year-long terms. Though the Coates sisters were apparently not founding members, they were quickly admitted and served faithfully. Beulah Coates was secretary for a time. The Society's output at the end of their first (winter) season of operations was recorded as "38 slips, 45 flannel garments, 18 children's shirts, 29 infants' shirts, 45 caps, 2 boys' shirts, 2 aprons, 1 short gown, 33 diapers, 5 pairs of socks; total 218; of which 158 have been distributed, besides some flannel & calico unmade, given to different individuals." (April 4, 1833)

The Female Society for the Relief and Employment of the Poor was apparently associated with the local Friends Meeting. The members described its purpose the distribution of clothing and food to “sick and Infirm Persons over sixty years of age who are not under the official care of the ‘Standing Committee’ [presumably a charitable arm of the local Friends Meeting].” The Society’s records describe the indigent condition of the people helped, and the aid given by members. For example, one early entry reads: “Julianna Randolph gave to Sarah Riley a respectable coloured woman who still continues when she can obtain work to earn a living by white washing scrubbing &c although over 80 years of age, a Flannel Petticoat and muslin chemise.”

The Union Benevolent Association was founded in 1831, describing itself in its Charter as “An institution for the encouragement of industry, the suppression of pauperism, and the relief of suffering among the worthy poor.” Beulah Coates was for many years Secretary of the 4th District and a representative to the central board. Members’ activities included visiting the sick and unfortunate, evaluating their needs, and distributing goods as well as finding educational and employment opportunities for the needy. A typical entry in the record book included the notations: “33 garments have been distributed from Dorcas societies of St. Philips and the 7th Presbyterian churches... 9 cords of wood [distributed] from the Widows’ Fund... 1 child placed at Day School.”

The Temporary Home Association was established in 1849 to provide a transient boarding house for women seeking work. The institution also housed children of employable age. The minute books of the association offer a detailed account of its foundation, organization, and meetings: “The President stated that the question had twice been put to her, should not the meeting of the Board be opened by reading a portion of Scripture and prayer; decision upon the subject was postponed.” The role of the Coates sisters in the association is not readily apparent, as they were not among the founding managers.

Also included in this subseries is an index of women seeking employment and ladies seeking nurses, housemaids, chambermaids, etc., along with records of successful placements. This volume may be related to the activities of the Temporary Home Association, but the link is not clear.

b. Genealogical research, 1711-1901.

In 1885, Mary Coates published a history of the Coates family. This subseries contains her drafts for that project, and a variety of family documents that she apparently collected for her research. Most are related to the Langdale and Hornor families, but some relate to Coates family members who have their own series and subseries. Some of Mary Coates’ personal correspondence is also included in this subseries.

Series 5. Other Coates Family Members

a. Samuel Coates (1711-1748), 1724-1745

Samuel Coates Sr. was a merchant in Philadelphia during the first half of the eighteenth century. A Quaker, he married Mary Langdale, the daughter of Josiah Langdale and Margaret Burton, both well-known English Quaker preachers. His papers include a ciphering book with instructions and examples of various arithmetical processes and conversions between different currencies and types of weight, two day books recording his business transactions, and a receipt book.

b. Amy (Hornor) Coates (1765-1838), 1790s-1830

Amy Hornor Coates was the second wife of Samuel Coates Jr. (1748-1830), and the mother of Benjamin Hornor Coates (Series III), as well as of Samuel Hornor and Reynell Coates, whose papers are included in other subseries of this series.

Amy Coates' papers consist of a cashbook, which details expenditures for food, firewood, and other daily necessities, and a commonplace book. The commonplace book contains transcribed poems, accounts of religious experiences, sermon extracts, a passage from Hindu spiritual writings, and some essays written by a young Benjamin H. Coates. Of particular interest is the transcription of a description of Jesus in a letter from Publius Lentullus, Roman president of Judea. The letter is well-known and widely though not universally presumed to be a forgery created c. 1500. Mostly of the entries in the commonplace book are undated, but what dates there are range from 1790-1810. Curiously, there is writing in both the front and back of the book, but not in the middle.

c. Thomas Coates (1746-1774) and his wife Mary (Allen) Coates, 1748-1785.

The papers of Thomas Coates, son of Samuel Coates (1711-1748) and brother to Samuel and Josiah L. Coates, consist of an account book detailing the settlement of Thomas' estate in 1774-1785.

d. Josiah Langdale Coates (1747-1809), 1789-1814.

Josiah Langdale Coates, son of Samuel Coates (1711-1748) and Mary Langdale, was for many years a partner in his brother Samuel's merchant and shipping business in Philadelphia. Records of that business can be found in Series II. This subseries contains records of Josiah's personal financial dealings, in the form of two receipt books, a pocket ledger, and a statement book of his account with Stephen Girard.

e. George M. Coates (1779-1868), 1803-1868.

The son of Josiah Langdale Coates and Mary (Morrison) Coates, George M. Coates kept a store in Philadelphia during the early 19th century. His papers consist of a receipt book (1839-1868) and two letter books containing copies of his outgoing business correspondence. "The early corn and sugar corn are out of the question," he wrote to Joshua Pierce in 1832. "I bought two quarts of early Garden Corn from a Jersey Gardener @ 50 Cents per quart, and do not know where to procure any more even at that high price, am in hopes of having some next season"

f. Samuel H. Coates (b. 1792), 1811.

Samuel H. Coates was the oldest son of Samuel Coates (1748-1830) and Amy Hornor Coates. His papers consist of a commonplace book containing notes on French vocabulary.

g. Reynell Coates (1802-1881), 1814.

Reynell Coates was the youngest son of Samuel Coates (1748-1830) and Amy Hornor Coates. His papers consist of a diary from 1814, which records Reynell's daily lessons and other activities with his schoolmates. In an entry for August 27, 1814, he noted, "Confined for wispering in school yesterday, by R. Parry who has gone to Philadelphia. Appointed waiter for next week. Went to swim but it was so cold that some got out almost as they were in."

h. Other Coates family members, c. 1700-1930.

This subseries consists of a deed and a transcribed estate inventory pertaining to Thomas Coates the elder; the personal receipt book of a unidentified Mary Coates dated 1748-1759; some correspondence of Benjamin Coates (son of George M. Coates and brother to Mary and Beulah); and a small amount of other family correspondence from the nineteenth century, apparently collected by William M. Coates in the early twentieth century.

Series 6. Zane Family

a. Correspondence, 1761-1825

Like the Coates family, the Zanes were Philadelphia Quakers, and the Coates family managed the estates of the Zanes. Isaac Zane, Jr., was born in Philadelphia in 1743 to Isaac Zane, Sr., and his wife Sarah. While still in his teens Isaac Jr. settled in Frederick County, Virginia, where he eventually established the Marlboro Iron Works, which produced stoves, cookware and raw iron that was sold as far away as Glasgow. He also served in the Virginia state legislature.

This subseries consists mainly of the outgoing correspondence of Isaac Zane, Jr. (1743-1795) to his brother-in-law John Pemberton, his father Isaac Zane, Sr., and his sister Sarah Zane. Incoming correspondence from Sarah Zane, uncle Ebenezer Zane, and friend Alexander White are also included. After Isaac's death in 1795, the correspondence pertains to his sister and executor Sarah. Her correspondence with sister Hannah Zane Pemberton, Alexander White, Dr. Robert Macky, Jacob Rinker, and Ebenezer Zane, discusses her health and the settlement of Isaac's estate.

b. Accounts, 1731-1824

This subseries contains account statements and receipt books of Isaac Zane, Sr., Isaac Zane, Jr., and Sarah Zane. Included are some records of the Marlboro Iron Works.

c. Estate of Isaac Zane, Jr., 1800-1824

This subseries includes notes and correspondence about the settlement of Isaac Zane Jr.'s estate, including a lengthy inventory of his library.

d. Land Papers, 1750-1824

This subseries comprises deeds, receipts, and rent agreements relating to Zane family property in Pennsylvania and Virginia.

e. Shewbart estate, 1733-1767

John Shewbart (d. 1745) was a tavern-keeper in Philadelphia in the early eighteenth century. Sometime before March 1733/4 he married a widow, Mary Hockley, who had grown children from a previous marriage. Mary took on John's business after he died in 1745. When she died in 1751, she named Isaac Zane as the executor of her estate.

The papers in this subseries consist primarily of receipts detailing the business and personal transactions of John and Mary Shewbart and the settlement of their estates.

Series 7. Morris Family

a. Deborah Morris correspondence, 1763-1815

Deborah Morris (1723/4-1793) was the youngest daughter of Philadelphia brewer Anthony Morris (1681/2-1763) and his wife Phebe (Guest) Morris. Deborah never married, but she inherited a farm in New Jersey from her father, and owned property in Philadelphia and in Bucks county, all of which she managed with the aid of her nephew Anthony Shoemaker. Deborah, like her family, was a devout Quaker and throughout her life was interested and involved in the activities of Meetings near and far.

This subseries contains both personal and professional correspondence written and received by Deborah Morris, primarily with her nephew and agent Anthony Shoemaker regarding property in Virginia.

b. Deborah Morris financial papers

This subseries contains receipts and accounts documenting Deborah Morris's property and personal transactions.

c. Other Morris family members

This subseries includes records of the estate of Anthony Morris, the will of his wife Phebe Morris, and a few letters and financial documents relating to their son Dr. Benjamin Morris (1724/5-1755).

Series 8. Vicary Family

Captain John Vicary was a Philadelphia sea captain and friend of Samuel Coates (1748-1830). When Vicary died about 1784, Coates became the guardian of Vicary's four children: William (b. 1771), Rebecca, Mary, and Hannah. The papers of the Vicary family record some of Captain John's business transactions, the settlement of his estate, and the maintenance and education of his children, through receipts, account statements, and a few items of correspondence. For example, one receipt reads "Rec'd March 5, 1793 of Rebecca Vicary Six pounds in full for learning the Bonnet making Business. [signed] Mary Bliss.” Most of the accounts are addressed to Samuel Coates as the guardian and later attorney for the family.

The papers also include a log book kept by Captain John Vicary, an account book describing the settlement of his estate, and another log book kept by William when he too became a captain. Entries in the log books describe the weather and shipboard activities: “Tuesday 3rd [March, 1795] this 24 Hours fine Weather People Employ’d fitting the Rigging & Bent the [St]arboard Cable so ends all Well.”

William Vicary retired to a mansion in Freedom, Pennsylvania, which still stands.

Series 9. Documents collected by the Coates family

This series contains items that cannot be integrated into other series either because their creators are unclear or for reasons of provenance.

The bulk of this series, the first thirty-eight folders, comprise documents collected by the Coates family that had previously been assigned numbers and arranged in numerical order. Most of these documents are historically interesting but have no overt connection to the Coates family. Items include a letter of Quaker founder George Fox to Friends Peter Hendrick, J. Clause, and J. Rowloff; letters of William Keith, Governor of Pennsylvania in the 1720s; a warrant for the arrest of Joshua Fisher and other Friends during the Revolution; a manumission certificate dated 1784; marriage certificates; a copy of a treaty with Native Americans made at Philadelphia in 1758; a letter of Rev. Absalom Jones; some records of Benjamin Franklin’s Market Street property; a 1692 deed for land in New Jersey from Daniel Cox to James Greenwood and Peter Guyon; and other items.

The remainder of the series consists of documents which, though similar in type and content to the papers of the Coates family, lack enough information to definitively link them to any particular family member. These items include records of land in Dismal Swamp, papers about legal arbitration between the White and Lippincott families, a return of the New Hampshire Militia dated 1806-7, and some miscellaneous accounts and volumes.
