Abstract

The New Century Trust was founded in 1893 as the incorporated body of the New Century Working Woman's Guild. Eliza Sproat Turner (1826-1903), a progressive women's activist, helped create both organizations. Over several decades, the trust oversaw and provided financial support for the guild's activities for women in the workforce, such as evening classes and lectures. For many women, the guild provided a haven away from the stresses of work, a place where they could obtain low-cost meals, sleeping accommodations, and even emergency financial assistance. In 1887, the guild began publishing a newspaper written by and for members, the Journal of Women's Work, which offered event calendars, advice columns, short stories, and poems. It also eventually formed its own library, gymnasium, and a variety of internal committees on which the members could serve. In 1895, the guild shortened its name to The New Century Guild and became a member of the Federation of Women's Clubs of Pennsylvania.

The records of the New Century Trust include their own and mostly those of the New Century Guild and its predecessor, New Century Working Women's Guild. Spanning from the mid 1800s to the early 2000s are board and committee meeting minutes, administrative files, membership materials including members' information cards, financial records, photographs, artifacts, clippings, and ephemera.

Background note

The New Century Guild, like many women's clubs, can trace its roots to women's religious societies of the early 1800s, such as the Sisters of Charity, founded by Elizabeth Seton (b. 1774) around 1809 in Baltimore, Maryland. This Roman Catholic organization was open to apostolic women and was devoted to helping children of the poor. During the early 1800s, women around the United States organized their own religious societies that were dedicated to everything from fundraising to mission work to education and childcare. By 1839, there are almost 700 such organizations in the U.S.

Although many women enjoyed charity work, those that could afford it sought to form their own purely social clubs, much in the same way men had for decades. During the mid to late 1800s, products of the Industrial Revolution had made life, especially home life, easier for many women. "In the latter half of the eighteenth century, life in [the United States] lost its early rigors and took on a degree of ease and gracious living.”<sup>1</sup> Many women had obtained a degree of freedom from housework and had more free time to pursue, if they wished, non-charitable and non-religious opportunities.

However, charitable ventures for women by no means disappeared. During the American Civil War (1861-1865) Clara Barton, Dorothea Dix, and others influenced many women to join in war relief efforts. (Among their ranks was a young writer from Philadelphia named Eliza Sproat Turner.) In these gatherings, women found allies in attaining their common goals. During the Great Central Fair of the U.S. Sanitary Commission, held in Philadelphia in June 1864, women and men, together, raised over a million dollars in war relief.

In 1869, Elizabeth Cady Stanton and Susan B. Anthony established the National Women’s Suffrage Association. The women’s movement was growing, and around the country, women (primarily those with wealth and means) recognized the need for more organizations that promoted and protected their interests. In Philadelphia, Turner was a strong proponent of suffrage, and several months after the National Women’s Suffrage Movement was founded, she help organize, in December 1869, the Pennsylvania Women’s Suffrage Association, with Mary Grew the association’s first president.

Seven years later, Turner joined the Women’s Pavilion of Philadelphia’s 1876 Centennial Exposition. During the festivities, she distributed an essay entitled “New Century for Women,” and spoke out in support of women’s clubs. Several women took notice and, in January 1877, a few months after the exposition, met with Turner at the home of Mrs. J. Peter Lesley. This was the first meeting of what would become the New Century Club of Philadelphia. Together with Charlotte L. Pierce, Turner created the club’s central principle: to be an “organized center of thought and action among women, for the protection of their interests.” Its first elected president in 1877 was Mrs. Sarah C. Fraley Hallowell. The club would provide for women refuge from the stresses of the home and workplace, and develop in them an appreciation for science, literature, and art. For its first two years, the club held meetings and classes in several different locations on the 1100 block of Girard Street. By 1879, they had raised enough money to rent a whole house (#1112) on the same street.

“In 1881 some of the club members, aware of their many opportunities for self-improvement, determined to extend these benefits to other women, particularly those employed who had little or no time leisure time during the day in which to study.”<sup>2</sup> Thus, in October 1881, the club started offering night classes for working girls and women in literature, French, singing, drawing, physiology, “oral reading,” history, bookkeeping, and German. By February 1882 there were more applicants for the classes than the club could accept. Additional classes were created in millinery, grammar, dressmaking, cooking, embroidery, home nursing and child care, and hygiene; and class times expanded to include Saturday nights.

In response to the increasing popularity of the evening classes, and believing that working women needed their own representation in the club, Turner formed the New Century Working Women's Guild in late 1882. Guild work soon encompassed most of Turner's time, but it was work that she deeply enjoyed. "She was never happier than when solving problems for her girls and working and planning for them."<sup>3</sup> For the guild's newspaper, the Journal of Women's Work, Turner and other members wrote articles and stories on social relationships, family matters, and the status of women in America. The guild proved so popular and its membership grew so rapidly that it eventually moved to its own location at 1131-1132 Girard Street (now Ludlow Street), where it would remain until the early 1890s.<sup>4</sup>

Around the mid 1880s, the guild put together gymnasium facilities, which were praised by George W. Childs, Public Ledger editor. During this time, men took notice of the club and guild, especially when they saw how profitable trained young women could be to a company. Childs and Anthony J. Biddle, a Philadelphia civic leader and financier, offered funds to support the creation of more trade classes at the guild. This led to the question of admitting men into the guild, something which Turner personally wanted. The idea was discussed at an 1888 meeting, but no decision was reached at the time.

Guild membership grew steadily over the 1880s. In 1886, 586 were enrolled in classes; by 1887, that number had increased to 720. In 1888, student enrollment dropped to 488, due in part to an economic depression caused, in part, by the blizzard of 1888, which struck New York City and partially paralyzed businesses on the east coast. The guild regained students in the next years, and enrollment rose to 791 by 1891.

In 1892, the guild trade and gymnasium classes moved to the new Drexel Institute of Art, Science, and Industry, which was founded by Anthony J. Drexel in 1891. This significantly reduced the number of women at the guild. Even so, the executive board of the guild sought larger quarters, and found them at 1225-1227 Arch Street in 1893. During that same year, Turner helped create the New Century Trust, which, as the incorporated body of the guild, would help secure the guild a permanent home and a sound financial future.

The relationship between the trust and the guild was similar to that of a board and its committees, in that the trust monitored and to a certain degree controlled the guild without interfering with its daily activities. In its own by-laws, the guild stated that it operated "within the organization of" the trust and that "its operations [were] subject to the approval of the trust's Board of Trustees." Essentially, the guild was a committee of the trust, and maintained its own by-laws, elections, accounts, and activities, which were all subject to the trust's approval and could be changed by the trust at any time. It was the trust's responsibility to make sure that the guild's activities conformed to its charter duty: to provide for "the social, industrial, and educational culture and improvement of working girls and women, without any sectarian distinction." The guild's successes and setbacks were, therefore, a reflection of the trust's administrative choices and managerial capabilities.

<sup>4</sup> Meanwhile, the New Century Club continued as a separate, women's rights-oriented organization. It maintained its interest in the guild through its own Committee on Guild and Evening Classes. The New Century Club created its own financial agent, the New Century Company, in 1891. The company's initial purpose was to raise money for a new club house, and it secured property at 124 South 12th Street in Philadelphia. Here was built a new house designed by a female architect. The club rented the house from the company and remained in this same location until 1973, when the house was demolished. Although the exact date of the club's demise is somewhat vague, the remaining club members of this time held meetings in various locations until at least 1977.

The Guild fell on hard times brought about by the Panic of 1893. Membership decreased rapidly, and by 1895 there were only 117 registered students. In an effort to attract new members, the guild started the "Noon Rest" in 1894. Around noon each day, the guild offered working women a hot meal, at reduced cost, and time to relax in their quarters. The idea worked, and as membership grew, the guild began offering temporary lodging and emergency financial support for members in need. Over the next ten years, the guild thrived, but saw the deaths of several of its senior staff members, including the guild's first president, Eliza Turner, who died in 1903.

As the guild's Arch Street neighborhood became more commercial over the early 1900s, the members again sought a new residence. When a "handsome Victorian property"<sup>5</sup> at 1307 Locust Street became available, the guild acquired the property. The house first opened to members on June 6, 1906.

In November 1906, the guild declared in its Journal, "In all respects we feel that we have finally attained what our dear Guild Mother [Eliza Turner] had in mind—a restful place for the brain-weary business woman; a home where every member will feel she is a necessary part of the Home Beautiful, and that, to perfect its inspiration, she must extend the hand of good fellowship to all her fellow workers."

The guild continued its growth into the 20th century and strongly supported women's causes, such as labor rights and suffrage. Guild members assisted in war relief efforts during World Wars I and II. Numerous social committees were formed, such as the Current Events Group and the Social Activities Group. To its entertainment roster, the guild added theatrical and musical groups who came to perform at the guild several times a year. When guild members started volunteering as ushers or to cook for the entertainers, the idea was formed to start weekly dinners for members. At first, dinners were served once a week, on Thursday. Over the years, service expanded to include several nights a week. As late as the 1990s, the guild was still offering dinners to members three days a week. By the end of 2003, even though the guild had undergone several administrative changes, it had added at least fourteen new members and still offered two dinners and a luncheon each month, as well as a variety of programs.

The New Century Trust, a non-profit organization, still resides in the guild's house at 1307 Locust Street. It continues to promote opportunities for working women and offers services such as educational and training programs and small business grants.

Scope & content

The records of the New Century Trust incorporate those of the trust as well as the New Century Guild for Working Women and the New Century Guild, and span one hundred and fifty years, from about 1854 to 2004, with the bulk of the material dating from 1882 to 2000. The majority of this collection relates to the guild's administrative, financial, and social activities; however, the records of the trust are especially prominent in first and second series of this collection. Since the trust maintained an overarching responsibility for the guild, the records of both organizations are intermingled. This comprehensive collection contains board and committee meeting minutes and minute books, administrative files, membership materials including members' information cards, financial records, photographs, artifacts, clippings, and miscellaneous ephemera. Since these are primarily organizational records, researchers will find scant personal information on members save for that which is contained in personal correspondence from members and in the guild's membership files.

This collection is arranged roughly according to subject, and then chronologically within each subject. The subsequent series and subseries are based on categories that were assigned by a previous archivist before the records were donated to HSP. The files have been kept in the order they were found, including portions of the collection that had been processed by the previous archivist. Loose or miscellaneous material has been interfiled within the arrangement. The records have not been divided into those of the guild and trust because this distinction was not evident in the original order; therefore, most folders contain mixed documents. If a folder contains only the records of one of these groups, it is noted in the folder's title. The arrangement includes five series, with two of those series being further divided into numerous subseries.

Please note that certain materials in this collection are closed to researchers until specific dates. Please see the Restrictions note on page 17 and the Box and Folder List starting on page 18 for further details.

Series I (Administration) documents the daily and internal operations of the trust and guild. This series has been divided into seven subseries: Board and other committees, Membership, Personnel, Dining room, Insurance, Correspondence, and Miscellaneous. The first subseries (Board and other committees) is made up exclusively of meeting minutes from the guild's executive board and other committees, most notably, the business committee. In addition to loose minutes, there are also ten bound volumes, some of which contain minutes of the first meetings of the New Century Guild of Working Women. The membership material in the second subseries consist of records of member's dues owed and paid, cards and slips noting members' personal information, length of membership, and to which committees they belonged, and minutes of the guild's membership committee. This subseries also includes minutes and correspondence from the Seniors/Grand Seniors Committee which consists of those women who had been members of the guild for five to twenty-five years or more. The third subseries (Personnel) contains employee work files, unemployment tax information and booklets, workmen's compensation forms, and payroll information. Materials in the fourth subseries (Dining room) pertain specifically to the guild's food service operations, including their regular members' dinners and special events. There are financial statements and volumes, receipts and reimbursement forms, and lunch and dinner reservation forms. The fifth subseries (Insurance) contains records of insurance policies held by the guild and trust from the 1940s to 2004. The correspondence in the sixth subseries includes copies of letters mailed to trustees, members, and staff. The final subseries (Miscellaneous) contains a variety of material such as address books, guest registration forms, invoices and correspondence concerning the costs of printing the guild's newsletter, and questionnaires.

Series 2 (Financial) has also been divided into several subseries: Executive board and trust; Special funds, wills, bequests; Investments and other funds; Taxes, and General. As a whole, this series presents the guild's and trust's financial states over a period of more than one hundred years. Since the trust was responsible for financing the guild's operations, these records also show in detail the flow of money from one to the other. The first subseries (Executive board and trust) contains statements, volumes, receipts, and forms that pertain to the trust's finances. There are also specific records of how money was spent by the guild's executive board. The second subseries (Special funds, wills, bequests) includes records of planned giving, details on member's bequests, and copies of member's wills. There are also details on special funds that were donated by members or made up from their bequests, such as the Shrigley hospital bed fund and the A.K. Carruth restricted fund. The materials in the next subseries (Investments and other funds) highlight the trust's investments. While several banks managed the trust's investments over the years, the two most prominent in this subseries are Mellon and Girard. There are also detailed statements on the trust's "current" and "permanent" accounts. The Taxes subseries chiefly contains federal, state, and city tax forms; however, there is also correspondence between the guild, trust, their tax lawyers, and the Internal Revenue Service. Housed in the last subseries (General) are monthly bank account statements, bills, invoices, receipts for repairs and improvements, miscellaneous correspondence, and yearly and multi-year presentations of overall financial status of the guild and trust.

Series 3 (Programs and publications) contains a mix of material published by the guild (such as yearbooks and newsletters) and material about their educational and social programs. There are original and hand-edited issues of the guild's newsletter, several guild yearbooks, copies of their charters and by-laws, published annual and triennial reports, and special publications such as The Annals of the New Century Guild and 100th Anniversary, 1882-1982. There are also membership brochures and fact sheets. Other materials in this series document the guild's programs for members and for the public. There is information on guild-sponsored field trips, rentals of their auditorium space, and classes and dinners. There are also flyers, event calendars, and program applications.

Series 4 (Historic documentation and interpretation) contains material on the guild's and trust's histories. There are reports and essays by guild members and outside writers, which include several histories of the organizations and their early members, particularly founder Eliza Turner. Also included are late nineteenth and early twentieth century letters between guild members, material pertaining to the purchase of a historic marker, papers on the guild's success in obtaining a mural painting of its building, and miscellaneous items such as plaques once displayed inside the guild's house.

Series 5 (Images and artifacts) includes images from events such as guild dinners, programs, concerts, and reunions. There are several boxes of photographs, glass plate negatives, prints, and drawings. Many of the photographs document the changing interior of the guild's house, from the early 1900s to the 1990s. In addition, there are early images of Eliza Turner and other founding members. Artifacts in this series include medals, a bingo board, a postage stamp, a 1932 issue of The Moon Magazine for the blind, and a ca. 1840 penny stamp. There are also several folders of piano, choral, and popular music from the 1870s to the early 1900s.

Series descriptions

Series 1. Administration, 1882-2004 (Boxes 1-32, 85-90, Vols. 1-34)

a. Board and other committees, 1882-2003.

This subseries is made up almost entirely of meeting minutes of the New Century Guild's Executive Board (or Executive Committee as it was first called) and its many committees. The Executive Board minutes cover the years from 1882 to 2000. Handwritten minutes are contained in ten volumes; transcribed copies and regular typed minutes are available in Boxes 1 to 3.

In late 1882, the New Century Club approved the creation of the New Century Working Women's Guild. The early minutes of the guild's Executive Committee reveal guild purchases, classes, finances, and the formation of numerous sub-committees, among them Business, Eligibility (or Membership), and Entertainment. As the guild evolved, the meeting minutes reflect its extension of classes and services, and include discussions of membership and financial statistics, lists purchases of magazines and books for its library, lengthy committee reports, and news on guild events.

Beginning in the 1930s and 1940s, there is a general division in minutes between those of the Executive Board and those of the guild's regular monthly meetings. The monthly regular or "business" meetings were open to all members and usually included committee and financial reports. Researchers should note that since copies of regular meeting minutes were made for the Executive Board, these copies are mixed (chronologically) with minutes of the Executive Board, all of which were kept in 3-ring binders. This material has been removed from binders, kept in order, and placed in folders.

This subseries also contains several folders of material pertaining to the trust's governance of itself and the guild, with particular emphasis on the trust's efforts to regain its non-profit status, which it lost in the early 1970s. There are papers on proposed changes to the guild's by-laws, examinations of the trust's mission statement, and several documents clarifying the relationship between the trust and the guild.

Lastly, there is a significant amount of minutes and miscellaneous records from meetings of numerous guild sub-committees, such as the Willing Hands Committee, the Educational Committee, and the House Committee.

b. Membership, 1882-2004.

Material in this subseries highlights the guild's broad membership and how it has grown and evolved since the guild's inception. There are slips and cards of members' personal and contact information, volumes of member lists and dues paid, membership applications, some minutes of the Membership Committee, and material from the Seniors/Grand Seniors Committee.

The first volume in this subseries, "Consecutive Roll of the New Century Guild, vol. 1, 1882-1903," demonstrates well the detail with which the guild kept records on its members. Recorded are membership numbers and statistics (e.g., new members, deaths, married members, members of the Executive Board). There is also information about each member, such as her name, address, year she joined the guild, occupation, and comments. Near the end of the book are statistics about the members' occupations by year, which included dressmaker, janitress, and stenographer, among others. By 1886, more occupations were noted: upholsterer, nurse, teacher, housekeeper, dentist, artist, etc. In the "comments" sections are notes on the members' past or current inclusion on the Executive Board and if the member taught evening classes. By 1903, there were 2055 members; most were from Philadelphia, but some were from the city's suburbs and New Jersey.

Early members (who joined between 1882 and the early 1900s) were also required to fill out membership slips, which contain names, addresses, occupations, dates of election (or admissions) and dues received. Starting around the 1920s, the guild began to keep track of "resigned," "delinquent," or "deceased" members by writing on individual index cards members' names and years as a member. These cards were then filed under the appropriate heading. All told, there are five boxes of member slips and cards. Boxes 13, 14, 85, and 87 contain membership applications from 1953 to 2003, which include the same information as the early member slips. (Please note that boxes 85 and 87 are closed to researchers until 2018). These slips and applications are in order of members' numbers (which they received when their application was accepted) rather than alphabetically by last name.

Also included in this subseries are meeting minutes from the guild's Membership Committee and the Seniors/Grand Seniors Committee. The latter committee was comprised of members who had served for at least five (Seniors) or twenty-five (Grand Seniors) years.

Please note that, in addition to closed files, this subseries contains two volumes (Volumes 19 and 24) of which portions are closed to researchers. The open portions have been photocopied and foldered. These volumes may be accessed with permission from the New Century Trust's president and the restriction will be lifted on January 1, 2018.

c. Personnel, 1947-2004.

These records consist of employee files, payroll records, unemployment compensation notices and tax forms, and papers from the State Workers Insurance Fund. Additionally, there are employees' letters of resignation, workers' compensation forms and reports, employment applications and résumés, and job inquiries. The material in this subseries is closed to researchers for a period of 75 years from creation dates. Please see the restrictions note on page 17 and the Box and Folder List starting on page 18 for details on when this material will be opened.

d. Dining room, 1953-2004.

The material in this subseries documents the guild's food service activities over a period of fifty years. There are financial records, reservation sheets, menus, dining room policies and procedures, papers from kitchen renovations and repairs, and kitchen staff information. The advent of the guild's "Noon Rest" in the 1890s marked the beginning of its tradition of providing hot meals for members. Sometime during the early 1900s, the guild also began serving dinner on selected nights. Members had to register and pay a small fee for their dinners. By 1960, dinner service had become a regular event.

The largest portion of this subseries consists of financial material, in Boxes 24 to 26, such as bank account statements and reports to the board. The monthly dining room reports to the board contain income and expenditure lists, which include the number of dinners held and people served. There are also summaries of the dining room bank balance, petty cash holdings, and inventory credits. Additional material includes food receipts and reimbursement forms from the 1990s and a set of dining room account books from the 1960s to the 1990s.

Adding to the financial papers is a sizable group of lunch and dinner reservation sheets and petty cash settlement forms from 1990 to 2001. Although the format of the reservation sheets changed over time, the recorded information is generally the same: event (lunch, dinner, or special occasion), time, list of members' names, and dues paid. Later reservation sheets sometimes included the name of the main entrée (e.g. pot roast, beef stroganoff, orange roughy, etc.) Filed with most of the reservation sheets are additional financial papers, receipts, and petty cash settlement slips that show how much money was spent for and earned from a particular meal.

Please note that, in addition to the closed files, this subseries contains one volume (Volume 32) that contains material closed to researchers. The open portion has been photocopied and foldered. This volume may be accessed, however, with permission from the New Century Trust's president and the restriction will be lifted on January 1, 2018.

e. Insurance, 1945-2004.

Aside from several folders of insurance policies, this subseries also contains house and furnishing inventories and appraisals, which were done for insurance purposes, and correspondence. The inventories and appraisals in Box 28 Folder 7, provide an interesting and detailed look into the contents of the guild's house at 1307 Locust Street. House appraisals from 1945 and 1971 revealed the house's rising worth, from $24,000 to $58,000. There are also inventories of the house's "furniture and other articles," which included everything from paintings to tables to bookcases. In 1969, the guild hired the Samuel T. Freeman and Co., Auctioneers and Appraisers, to conduct an appraisal of the house's furnishings. Removed to Box 89 are recent appraisals of several of the guild's artworks.

f. Correspondence, 1945-2004.

The correspondence in this subseries relates to the guild's administrative functions. There are two folders of general correspondence that cover committee meetings, members and employees, house functions and use of the house by members, food service and special events, and general policies and procedures. Following this are three folders of trustee correspondence, which is chiefly financial in nature. There are also folders of incoming and outgoing correspondence for specific staff members: Laura Beale Toy, guild president in the 1970s and early 1980s; Ruth Styer, guild treasurer during the 1990s; and Sally Ann Tobias, resident concierge during the 1990s. Also in this subseries is correspondence concerning the guild's 100th anniversary, its inclusion in the Pennsylvania Federation of Women's Clubs, and the guild's success in obtaining an historical marker and mural for its building.

g. Miscellaneous, 1906-2003.

This subseries contains an interesting assortment of documents. In Box 31 Folder 10 is a copy of the 1906 deed transferring ownership of the property at 1307 Locust Street from William A. Drysdale to the New Century Trust. There is a folder of additional inventories of house furnishings from 1981, 1997, and 2001. Unlike the inventories in subseries e, it seems these inventories were done solely for the members rather than for insurance purposes. There are several folders of material from the preparation, editing, and printing of the guild's newsletter. Additionally, there are member questionnaires, address books, and polices on guest registration and lists of overnight guests.

Series 2. Financial, 1882-2004 (Boxes 32-71, 90-100, Vols. 35-69)

a. Executive board and trust, 1882-2004.

The financial records of the guild's executive board and the New Century Trust span over one hundred years and include bank statement, account books, and reports on approved bills and petty cash accounts.

The thirty-five volumes in this subseries include ledgers, journals (or transfer binders) and cashbooks. Among the earliest volumes are guild executive board account books on evening classes and office supplies from 1882 to 1900. These show what classes were offered by the guild as well as how much monthly tuition each class gained. From this tuition, the guild paid its teachers, for a new gymnasium, and for general supplies.

In Boxes 32 and 33 are several folders of disbound volumes and old ledger sheets that include pages from the trust transfer binder, 1938 to 1954, and pages from a trust combined journal and ledger from 1973 to 1976. In Box 38 are pages from the guild's executive board cashbook and ledger from the 1970s to the 1990s.

Aside from bound and disbound volumes, there are guild board and trust financial reports. Specifically pertaining to the New Century Trust are cash reports of the treasurer from the 1950s and 1960s that detail the trust's yearly receipts, disbursements, assets, liabilities, and investments. From more recent years (1998 to 2000) are extensive print outs of the trust's transactions that include line items for membership dues, salaries, investments, and taxes. They also include details on money earned from and spent on guild activities, such as dinner and programs.

Financial papers of the New Century Guild's executive board make up the majority of this subseries. Most extensive is a series of reports on petty cash and approved bills that span from 1965 to 1999 and are housed in Boxes 33 to 37 and 91. The guild's petty cash account was essentially utilized for household and office supplies.

There are also several folders of receipts for items paid for with petty cash. These reports and receipts, along with the guild's bills for utilities, charitable contributions, and wages were examined by the guild's finance committee, who then put together reports on "bills for approval," which included lists of paid and unpaid bills of which they approved payment. From 1965 to about 1977 these reports and receipts were filed separately; but starting around 1978 the reports and receipts were filed together in stapled packets in monthly order.

Following these reports are board bank statements, miscellaneous reports on board expenses, the board's cash accounting records, and yearly compilations of financial reports to and of the board.

Please note that, in addition to the closed files, this subseries contains one volume (Volume 53) that is closed to researchers, but may be accessed with permission from the New Century Trust's president. This restriction will be lifted on January 1, 2018.

b. Special funds, wills, bequests, 1882-2004.

This subseries focuses on monies the trust and guild received through members' bequests and donations. While these papers highlight the generousities of numerous members, most folders contain only copies of wills and legal correspondence. There are, however, a few funds for which there are more extensive records.

In 1924, guild member Clara Austin Shrigley donated $5,000 to what became known as the "Clara Austin Shrigley Memorial Fund." This money was intended for the Women's Southern Homeopathic Hospital of Philadelphia (which later became the Broad Street Hospital) for the purpose of securing a bed for use specifically by guild members. Prior to this, the guild had a hospital bed committee and a $5,000 endowment for a bed at the Women's Hospital of Philadelphia. The guild managed these funds under its "Hospital Bed Fund," which eventually included an emergency hospital fund. In 1952, the jurisdiction over the Shrigley Fund was transferred, by court order, to the New Century Trust, but the guild continued to manage the bed at the Women's Hospital and the emergency hospital fund.

The guild also managed other notable funds such as the Harper Fund and the Cope Memorial Fund. In the 1930s, member Lillie du Puy Van Culin Harper left the guild $500 in trust for the Willing Hands Committee. There are several folders of material on this fund which includes copies of her will, estate principal and income statements, and correspondence. In the 1960s, the guild started the Katherine and Mary Cope Memorial Fund from $3,000 bequests from each sister. Over time, this money was used to fund the guild's dinner and selected programs and special events.

Beyond the files pertaining to specific requests are general records of the guild's special funds which, besides those previously discussed, include funds for the guild committees, the president's office, and specific programs. There are five boxes of receipts, reimbursement forms, bank account statements, account book sheets, trial balance and committee reports, and correspondence. This subseries also contains three volumes.

c. Investments, securities, and other funds, 1885-2004.

Material in this subseries shows, in more detail, how the New Century Trust managed its own money and effectively supported the New Century Guild. There are fund reports, investment reviews. Making up a significant portion of this subseries are investment and account statements from the trust's primary banks: first Girard Trust, and then Mellon.

The New Century Trust, as the incorporated body of the New Century Guild, was responsible, to a certain degree, for the guild's financial well-being. These records, which span primarily from the 1970s to the 2000s, reveal that the trust's money fell into three general categories: invested funds, current funds, and permanent funds. Invested funds were those placed into stocks, bonds, and other securities. Current funds were used to finance guild operations, and permanent funds were generally used for taxes and other fees. The trust's investments were managed by Girard Bank from the 1970s to the mid-1980s and by Mellon Bank from the mid-1980s to at least 2004. These records, filed by year, include ledger sheets, financial reports made for the board, investment reports and portfolios made by the banks, numerous account and assets statements, and investment reviews.

d. Taxes, 1941-2003.

At five boxes, this is the smallest financial subseries. It contains over sixty years worth of the trust's and guild's tax records. The majority of the material consists of federal, state, and local tax forms; however, there are also scattered letters from accountants, instructional booklets, and copies of board financial reports.

e. General, 1942-2004

This subseries documents the guild's daily bookkeeping and upkeep. Housed in fourteen boxes are yearly financial reports of the trust and of the guild's treasurer, general banking statements, utility bills, receipts, and invoices for maintenance, renovations, and repairs. This series also contains annotated copies of the same trust cash reports that can be found in subseries a. The copies in this subseries, which cover a longer span from the 1940s to the 1970s, were made for the guild and filed accordingly by their bookkeepers.

In Boxes 65 to 68 and 95 to 98 is the first major portion of this subseries: general accounting records that include copies of board and committee expense reports, business checking account statements, correspondence from accountants, general ledgers, and purchase request forms. There are also, in Box 97, printouts of all the trust's most recent accounts as of 2003.

The other major group under this subseries, which is housed in Boxes 68 to 71 and 98 to 100, is made up of bills, invoices, receipts, and correspondence relating to the guild's utilities, renovations, and repairs. In addition to almost two decades worth of phone, gas, oil, and electric bill stubs are receipts, invoices, and correspondence from cleaning and pest control services, general contractors, light repair service companies, office supply companies, and food service companies.

Series 3. Programs and publications, 1888-2003 (Boxes 72-76, 100-102)

The guild's primary publication was its newsletter, The New Century Journal. It was founded in 1887 as a newspaper entitled the Journal of Women's Work. Around 1890, the newspaper's format changed to a more user-friendly newsletter and it was renamed the Working Women's Journal. By the 1950s, the newsletter was called The New Century Journal of Women's Interests. In 1995, the newsletter's name changed one last time to The New Century Journal. Although this series contains a few photocopies of newsletters of the 1880s, the majority date from the 1950s to 2000s.

Several elements of the newsletter have remained constant over time: calendars of events, lists of new members, reports from the board, and reports on programs. Early newsletters also contained advice columns, lists of books added to the guild's library, short stories, poems, and letters to the editors. More recent newsletters have been vehicles for the guild's dinners and programs, and include calendars, reports on events held at or sponsored by the guild, and menus.

Making up the second portion of this series are records from the guild's programs, including fundraisers and regular and special events. Materials include itineraries from and reports on guild field trips, committee meeting minutes, financial papers (receipts, bills, and invoices), flyers, proposals, calendars, and correspondence.

Series 4. Historical documentation and interpretation, 1888-2004 (Boxes 76-66, FF 1)

What this series lacks in size (18 folders) it makes up for in content. It contains items related to efforts by guild members and others to record and interpret the history of the guild as an organization, as well as its individual members. Materials include correspondence, clippings, booklets, programs, biographical essays, scrapbooks, and copies of a publication on the guild's 100th anniversary.

Some of the earliest material begins with the death of the guild's founder, Eliza Sproat Turner. Mentioned consistently throughout the material in this series is Turner's dedication to the guild and the promise of its members to carry on her legacy. The folder of her biographical material contains several early members' recollections by of Turner's leadership of the guild in the 1880s and 1890s, a time when many thought it would never succeed. In Box 77 folder 7 is an essay entitled "Presidents of the New Century Guild," in which Turner and other guild presidents, until 1945, are honored.

Those searching for a more comprehensive portrait of the guild's activities will find such information in the scrapbook in Box 77 Folders 2 to 4, the chronology in Box 77 Folder 8, or the copy of the guild's publication 100th Anniversary, 1882-1982, in Box 77 Folders 11 and 12. The scrapbook contains newspaper clippings on the guild's events and members in the early 1930s. There are articles on the guild's classes, causes, and membership, many of which contain pictures of and interviews with the members themselves. The "New Century Guild Chronology" is an apparently unpublished draft of the guild's daily happenings from 1882 to about 1958. Compiled from the guild's newsletter and board minutes are snippets on significant events, anniversaries, and classes. Also included are notes on membership and staff changes, house repairs and renovations, and changes in the guild's operations. Finally, the publication 100th Anniversary, 1882-1982, details the guild's history from its founding in 1882. In addition to a lengthy discussion on Eliza Sproat Turner, it describes the history of the guild's classes, its membership base, its various residences, and its committees and programs.

Series 5. Images and artifacts, ca. 1854-2004 (Boxes 78-84, 102, Vols. 70-73, FF 2-3)

This final series provides a visual record of the guild, its residence, members, and events over a period of more than one hundred years. In addition to photographic prints, there are film negatives, glass negatives, and copper plates. A large number of photographs have been placed, roughly in chronological order, in an album (Box 78). Artifacts include sheet magazines, music and song books, a penny stamp, a 1932 issue of The Moon Magazine for the blind, a bingo board, and a hymnal. Also in this series is a copy of Turner's poetry book called Out-of-Door Rhymes, as well as her notebook entitled Miscellany, in which Turner wrote a few poems and prose.

Boxes 78 (the photo album) and 81 both contain an assortment of images that fall into three general sets: formal and informal pictures of guild members; photographs of the rooms and interiors of the guild's residence at 1307 Locust Street; and photos of events, such as guild dinners, concerts, assemblies, and holiday gatherings. Box 81 contains early- to mid-twentieth century images of guild members using the guild's facilities, having tea, using the library, etc. There are also, in this box and the album, early portraits of guild leaders, including Eliza Sproat Turner, Edith Brubaker, Lillie du Puy Van Culin Harper, and Mary Mumford.

The second group of images is that of the guild's rooms and interiors. Among the earliest are copper plates (in Box 79) and glass negatives (in Box 82), all from around 1900. (Prints made from these items have been placed Box 81.) There are original copies of the prints as well as more recent copies and digital copies on CD. Other interior photographs show the guild in the 1950s and at Christmas time in the 1970s. There are also copies of pages from a scrapbook of guild interiors created in the early 1980s. The original photographs were removed from the scrapbook and placed in the album.

The final portion of photographs consists of guild events. While most of these photos are in the album, in Box 81 is a scrapbook of the guild's Senior Luncheon on May 14, 1988 which honored the guild's long-term members. In the album are numerous other photographs, most from the early 1980s to the late 1990s, showing the guild members at holiday dinners and gatherings, musical programs, lectures, and, notably, at the unveiling of their historical marker in the late 1990s.
