Behind-the-Scenes Vault Tour

Behind no less than five sets of locks rest some of the most treasured items in HSP’s collection of over 21 million manuscripts, graphics, and books. Through Behind-the-Scenes Vault Tours, HSP offers the opportunity to see these documents closer than ever before and, in the case of a few materials, to even hold them.

• Hum along to The Star-Spangled Banner with Francis Scott Key’s handwritten lyrics
• Pose for a selfie with the first photograph taken in North America
• Chase the changes in the U.S. Constitution through its first and second handwritten drafts
• Commiserate with the man responsible for a typo in the printer’s proof of the Declaration of Independence
• Compare the Philadelphia of today with the first map of the city produced for William Penn before his arrival in the Delaware Valley

Add-on Fee: $450 for one hour, maximum of 5 guests

Document Show & Tell

Our librarians and archivists will bring history to life as they discuss a display of historic documents prepared on a topic of your choice. Includes fifteen unique documents.

Add-on Fee: $250, maximum of 25 guests.
Preferred Caterers

The Historical Society of Pennsylvania maintains this small list of preferred caterers with whom our guests have had excellent experiences and who are familiar with our facility and policies. You may hire your own caterer, however they must contact HSP at least two weeks prior to the event to ensure they are able to abide by our policies. Due to the fragile nature of our historic collections, no open flames of any kind, including sterno, are permitted in the building. We highly recommend hiring a caterer for your event as we do not have kitchen facilities onsite.

Please note alcohol may only be served by a licensed caterer. In accordance with Pennsylvania law, alcoholic beverages cannot be sold, and individuals must be of legal age to be served. No open containers of alcohol may leave the building.

Who may rent space at HSP?

The facility is available for public use and may be rented to individuals, organizations, companies and private groups. Discounted rates are available for nonprofit organizations (501c3). Our spaces can accommodate most types of events, including meetings, seminars, lectures, workshops, presentations, organizational fairs, and receptions.
A Historic Building

Founded in 1824, the Historical Society of Pennsylvania (HSP) has called 1300 Locust Street in Philadelphia home since 1884. In its early years, the Society was housed in several locations throughout the city, first at the Phrenological Society in Carpenter’s Court, then in an upstairs room of the American Philosophical Society, in rented rooms at the Pennsylvania Life Insurance Company and then the Athenaeum, and next at 820 Spruce Street in a building known as the Picture Building, on the grounds of Pennsylvania Hospital. These 60 years of repeated relocation were tied to the need to find adequate archive space to store HSP’s constantly growing collection of historic documents and artifacts.

After years of saving, in 1884 HSP took up permanent residence at its current location in what was then the Patterson mansion, once owned by a well-respected Major General in the American and Mexican-American Civil Wars, General Robert Patterson. The mansion was originally built in 1823 for Philadelphian John Hare Powel, who had purchased the land from Edward Shippen Burd. At the time of construction, the house was thought to have “simple neoclassical lines that presented a quiet contrast to the exuberant details of the eclectic new Victorian buildings going up in the neighborhood, many designed by Frank Furness.”¹ By 1835, the house was owned by Patterson, who lived there with his family for nearly fifty years. The house, with its gardens and greenhouses, came to be well known in Philadelphia, as Patterson had frequently entertained notable guests including author Charles Dickens and actress Fanny Kemble.

Due to space constrictions and fire concerns at the turn of the twentieth century, the original mansion gradually became unsuitable to house the Society’s collection which was dramatically growing in size, value, and historical significance.² Over the first twenty years of residence in the mansion, HSP made various additions and changes to the original building, including the introduction of innovative fireproof features and storage areas to ensure the institution could successfully grow for years to come. The historic Reading Room in our Library today was a fireproof addition to the west side of the mansion constructed in 1889, known then as the Jordan Annex. Despite this addition, the mansion section of the building was not fireproof, which presented substantial concern about the potential of fire to destroy or damage the Society’s historic collection.

² Griffith, 50.
In 1901, HSP announced a campaign to replace the Patterson mansion with a state-of-the-art fireproof building and full construction was completed with funding from the Commonwealth in 1910. The building was designed by Philadelphia architect, Addison Hutton, who also designed many cultural institutions, hospitals, schools, and prominent residences in the region. One of the first fully-fireproof buildings in the United States, Hutton’s engineering was cutting-edge at the time with thick walls made of brick and no wood used in construction, not even for the bookcases or furniture. Each room was divided by a fireproof door hung on an inclined railway track, counter-weighted so that when the temperature rises a fusible plug melts and the door automatically closes, sectioning off that room from flames. The building officially opened to the public with much fanfare and two days of celebration in April 1910.

Changes in the following decades included the introduction of an air purification system in 1948, climate control systems in the 1970s, and various upgrades in the years since. In 1994, HSP decided to shift its focus and concentrate solely on its function as a special collections library and research center. Major renovations took place from 1997 to 1999, resulting in a newly restored Great Hall (now Reading Room), installation of compact shelving in several storage areas, and new cases to accommodate displays. From 2002-2009 the art and artifact collection was transferred to its new home at the Philadelphia History Museum at the Atwater Kent.

Walk through our doors today, and you’ll step into the modern face of our historic building. In 2013, we completed a $5 million renovation updating our Lobby, Information Commons, and archival spaces to make it easier for researchers to access materials and better welcome visitors. Our Lobby is a beautiful blend of modern and classic tastes, with eye-catching photographs, maps, paintings, and other items from our collections on a Digital Wall just feet away from the 19th century Patterson Mansion grand staircase. Other pieces from the Patterson Mansion have been systematically kept and integrated into the building over the years, including several fireplace mantles throughout all five floors of the building.
