Beginning in 1805, Indian nations in the area that became Minnesota made concessions of land for specific uses by the U.S. government through treaties. In exchange, they received money, goods, and various promises.

By 1858, the year Minnesota became a state, almost all Indian lands in Minnesota had been ceded or reserved for future settlement. In 1862, the U.S. government provided incentives for newcomers to move onto the land through the Homestead Act.

There are 375 treaties with Indian nations recognized by the U.S. Department of State.
